Always pass the fruit to everybody else before helping yourself. Common politeness will induce your company to leave the choicest specimens upon the plate, when you can eat them without exciting remark.

Take care of the pennies, and the pounds will take care of themselves. Three cents a day for a newspaper is not much, but in a year it amounts to over $9, in 100 years to over $900. You can save this $900 by a systematic borrowing of your neighbor's paper.

When looking over an album with a lady never make fun of the pictures. It may be a relative or particular friend. Neither praise the beauty of the unknown too highly. She may be the pet aversion of your fair companion.

Never return a borrowed umbrella. Lightning seldom strikes twice in the same place. Your friend, having ventured one umbrella upon your honesty, will be loth to repeat the risk.

Do not attempt to make yourself agreeable to the ladies when your wife is present. She will get the idea that you dislike female company. Always make your wife happy when you can. It is a duty, and should be a pleasure.

If your friend meets with adversity, do not offend him by asking into the particulars. His neighbor will be glad to tell you all. Thus you not only avoid offending your friend, but you give pleasure to his neighbor.

Never look over a person's shoulder when he is writing. You may be reading what he thinks of you.

Never smoke in the presence of ladies. Few ladies appreciate the flavor of tobacco, and your reputation will be injured by their reporting that you smoke execrable cigars.

After drinking, do not attempt to disguise your breath with a clove. True, people will smell the liquor, but on smelling the clove also, they will think you an unsophisticated amateur in the tipping line.

Never speak ill of a man. He will be sure to hear of it, and in his wrath he will tell something twice as damaging against you.

Do not judge from outside appearances. The football looks plump and fair proportioned, but there is nothing in it but wind.

Never say to an objectionable acquaintance, "Come and see me some time." Some time means any time, and he may come when you least expect him. It is better to name some specific time; then you can take the precaution to be out when he calls.

Be kind to the aged. They are not to blame for being old. They would be as young as you, probably, if they could have their way.

Do not stare at the ladies in the street. You may cause them to think that you are admiring them, and therefore make them vain.

Matrimonial Collisions.

The collision of husband and wife is so frequent as to have a literature to itself. In this case, the man, though he suffers also, suffers much the least. He can, if he is severely disappointed, get mentally away; he can form new friendships, he can harden himself until he is more or less apathetic, he can put affection, which makes the true string of such unions, away from him, and so, with his coolness restored, can go and find life endurable. He is free to strive, though the striving is useless.

The women—we are speaking throughout of the good—cannot get away, either from the house, or what is more important, from herself; cannot strive without loss of self respect; cannot enfranchise herself from her own sense of right, her own necessity to herself of concealing her disappointment from her own heart. She cannot be quietly discontented or coolly disappointed or patiently cautious. The condition is imperative, and she must suffer daily, hourly, perhaps, through life from a cause which even a mental change, possible to be made if duty did not forbid, would either remove or at least diminish to much smaller proportions. A woman so situated cannot be either serene or genuinely happy, can at best be resigned, feeling all the while how harsh destiny is, yet how irresistible, because it exerts its force, not from outside, but straight on her own heart.

"I must bear," says the husband to himself, and he bears. "I ought to cure it," says the wife; and it is incurable. The pain in the one case is disappointment; the pain in the other that of contention with the inexorable, which yet you know it is your duty to contend with. Patience is usually the medicine; but Griselda, whatever else she may be, is not serene, and Griselda is but a fairy tale.—London Spectator.

DEATH OF SAMUEL D. GROSS, M.D.

The announcement of the death of Professor Gross, at a ripe old age, will be received by the medical profession in this kingdom with sincere regret and warm sympathy. There are few names better known among British surgeons than that of Gross. He has long been held here as a type of what an honorable, accomplished, and manly member of the profession should be; and as a representative of American Surgery, who in the course of a long life, has done honour to his country and would have been an honour to the profession of any country. As a teacher, as a surgeon, and as a cultivated gentleman, he was known, respected, and widely beloved. He was several times a visitor at the annual gatherings of the British Medical Association, of which he was one of the few honorary members—a distinction very rarely conferred, and highly prized. Had the state of Professor Gross's health allowed him to visit these shores during the last month, he would have taken part in the tercentenary festival at Edinburgh, and would once more have received a mark of the high esteem in which he has long been personally held in this country; and of the desire which we, in Great Britain, entertain to do honour to the representative men of our common profession in America.

Professor Gross received his degree of M. D. at the University of Pennsylvania in 1828, and commenced the practice of medicine in Philadelphia in the same year, devoting his leisure time to the translation of French and German medical works. In 1856, he became Professor of Surgery in the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, previous to which he filled professorships in several medical colleges. In 1882, he retired from active professional work. He brought out several books on medical science, including Elements of Pathological Anatomy and System of Surgery, each of which passed through three editions in a few years; Wounds of the Intestines, Manual of Military Surgery, John Hunter and his Pupils, etc. He founded and edited for several years the American Medical-Chirurgical Review and was a member of the American Philosophical Society and the Imperial Medical Society of Vienna.

By the death of Professor Samuel Gross, the medical profession has lost one of its greatest ornaments, and one of its most sterling characters; and while we condole with Americans on the loss of such a man, we may congratulate them that such a life has been passed among them, for the influence of it must have been great, and the good of it will last long after the man has passed away. His System of Surgery which, since its new ones, who will never forget him; and at his parting not a few tears were shed. Few who were present at the banquet in the Hall of Trinity College will have forgotten the most memorable incident of the feast, when the noble, patriarchal form of Samuel Gross rose on the dais with folded arms, and addressing them as "men and brethren," in a speech of weighty words well worthy of the man and of the occasion, bore testimony to the high merits of British surgery and the British nation, and expressed his strong conviction that two such people as the British and American must ever be united by the bonds of brotherhood and mutual admiration. He felt, and we must all feel, that this union, so important to the welfare of mankind, is not a little promoted by fraternisation of eminent men from the two sides of the Atlantic at the meetings of our associations. The more our brethren from the far west came among us the better shall we be pleased; and the more they resemble the noble man whose loss we deplore, the more sincerely shall we reverence and admire them.
